Lolo National Forest Land Management Plan Revision

Greetings!

I am contacting you because you have subscribed to the Lolo National Forest Plan Revision mailing list or we have identified you as a potentially interested party based on previous correspondence and involvement with projects on the Lolo National Forest.

I am pleased to welcome you to the Lolo National Forest's land management plan revision process! A land management plan, commonly known as a forest plan, is the overarching document that guides the management of a National Forest. The current Lolo National Forest Plan was adopted in 1986, and the time has finally come to revise it. The revision effort will be guided by the 2012 Planning Rule, rooted in the best available scientific information, and informed by public input.

Many of you have anticipated this planning effort for some time; for others, this process will be new. Our staff is committed to offering public engagement opportunities that allow everyone to participate and contribute their voice to this process. This work will be both challenging and exciting – and the best outcome will be achieved when many voices contribute.

As a first step, we need your help to ensure that our public engagement strategy meets your needs. We invite you to review our Draft Public Engagement and Participation Strategy and let us know what you think by sending a note to our Lolo Revision Inbox (SM.FS.LNFRevision@usda.gov). Your input will be most helpful if submitted by December 31, 2022. You will find other useful information on our Lolo Revision Web Hub to help you prepare to engage in the process (<http://www.fs.usda.gov/goto/lolo/planrevision>).

Shortly after the new year, we will launch additional information on the Web Hub, including a calendar of public engagement opportunities. From January to April, these engagements will be focused on various topics related to the development of an assessment of the Lolo National Forest. After this first milestone, we will begin working with you on developing a draft revised plan. Throughout this process, we will offer educational materials to ensure you are up to speed on the process and how you can provide meaningful input.

We sincerely hope that you will engage with us in this very important work. Thank you for your time and interest!

Best regards,

Amanda Milburn, Plan Revision Team Leader
